Industry News

Effective Feb. 4, OSHA revived its National Emphasis Program on respirable crystalline silica for general industry, maritime and construction to "identify and reduce or eliminate" silica-related hazards. The previous NEP, drafted in 2008, was cancelled in 2017 when OSHA released its revised Crystalline Silica Rule, which rendered the previous NEP inadequate.

Heavier Silica Rule Enforcement

The new NEP promises to reduce, or eliminate, workers' exposure to silica in general industry, maritime, and construction through increased targeted enforcement. This new program calls for inspectors to increase their focus on RCS exposure. Primary targets will be in specific industries most likely to have the highest silica exposure rates.

OSHA's Plan for Targeted Inspections

The OSHA Field Operations Manual, (Sept. 13, 2019) lists four priority levels for inspections:

1. Imminent Danger
Conditions where a danger exists that could reasonably cause death or serious physical harm

2. Fatality/Catastrophe
OSHA defines catastrophe as the hospitalization of an employee, an amputation or physical loss of an eye

3. Complaints/Referrals

4. Programmed Inspections
These occur where known hazards exist (combustible dust, chemical processing, falls in construction).
